Bob
O'Hara
may be the most well-traveled Arctic canoeist of the last century. It is noted that O'Hara has paddled the equivalent of the earth's circumference, all in frigid far-north waters. As a canoeist, he has paddled 27 "far north" rivers, many of them above the Arctic Circle and many of them two or more times. Some canoeists travel to the far north in search of isolated wilderness and return to regale their friends with tales of grueling portages and gnarly whitewater. O'Hara revels in a different kind of wilderness travel. He flies the native flag from his canoe to signal respect to any Inuit travelers he meets, and his tales most often focus on the friendships he has formed over the years. O'Hara simply belongs in a canoe, perhaps more at home on the water than he is on the land. The Arctic gave him that lifestyle, and the Inuit people a family. The tundra gave him a home.
